

Good morning!

Welcome Pot Luck was last night...over 45 in attendance! \(picture posted\)... This was probably the highlight of the day as winds were offshore and spotty, with cloud and thundershowers much of the day. Determined sailors and kites sailed in the rain or between showers with the wind rising to almost 20 gusty knots by sunset. \(picture posted\). We lost Ian Wilding for a while. Ian failed to return from sailing by dark, our worries increased by the gusty, offshore wind. One of the house captains stayed back at Ian's house waiting for him. He finally showed up about an hour after dark with " I was sailing of course" by way of explanation. It was a good reminder about the wisdom of sailing with a buddy and filing a 'flight plan' with someone reliable.

I slept in this morning, so it's way past breakfast coffee time...brunch is more appropriate this morning. It's still cloudy and the wind is still offshore and light. iWindsurf says it's supposed to get better today and of course, they're never wrong!

Cheers,
Bill
